Week in Review 3

This week I spent time looking up phrases that inspire me. Since high school there has been only one quote that has stuck out to me and it came from my 10th grade academic counselor: "You will fail at everything that you do not try." I tried to research the origins of this quote and found that due to the many variations of the quote it is very difficult to track its origins.

In Career Modules I began looking at my social media accounts and how they reflect my own personal brand. It is very important to have keep social media in line with my personal brand because future employers and clients can find that information at free will. I have also started work on my LinkedIn account and thinking about what I would like to include.

With my portfolio, I spent a lot of time sifting through old codes from TEM and figured out what codes I want to include. I also worked to make sure that my repo followed the correct formatting for this class as well.
